

What is CPU?

The central processing unit is the part of digital computers that performs data and software commands. Processes commands within the currently running software.

What is RAM?

Random access memory or random access memory is a type of temporary data store that can be read and modified in any order used in microprocessor systems and is generally used to store working data and machine code.

What is HDD?

A hard disk drive HDD. Hard disk drives are magnetic recording media used for data storage.

What is a bus?

A bus is a subsystem in the computer structure that transfers data or power between and within parts of the computer and is usually controlled by device execution software.